SAGA THING

Putting the Sagas of the Icelanders on trial

Body Count

Body Count

In addition to Body Count, we also track each saga's Body Count Density Measurement (BCDM). This brilliant idea came to us from Greg Rice, who thought that some form of deaths-per-page density measurement might provide a more useful way of tracking the bloodsheddyness of the sagas. We liked the idea enough to adopt it, though we've elected the far more reasonable and accurate deaths-to Hrafnkels ratio for our Body Count Density Measurement. Special thanks to Greg for the idea and to Peter Larsen for keeping track of our Hrafnkel stats from previous episodes

The Saga of the Sworn Brothers (Ep. 33): While it felt like a lot more, the body count for the Saga of the Sworn Brothers came in at 63. Thorgeir and Thormod did their best but couldn't even match Thord Menace. Too much poetry from Thormod, I guess.

Third Quarter Court Results: The total number of deaths in the 10 sagas covered in the third quarter was 1,055, continuing the upward trend from the first and second quarters. Egil's Saga provided 407 of those. That's not quite half, but pretty close. Both Hord and the Holm-Dwellers and Bard's Saga also put up respectable numbers, with 220 and 104 each. Those three sagas account for nearly 70% of the body count for the third quarter. Ale-Hood contributed absolutely nothing since we don't count burned up forests. Way to go, Ale-Hood.

1,055 total deaths / 21.59 total Hrafnkels = Third Quarter Court BCDM of 48.87 (quite impressive...now imagine what it could have been if Ale-Hood contributed in some way)

Total Hrafnkels read across 30 sagas = 68.94!

Professor Stone has estimated that the homicide rate in medieval England was on average 10 times that of 20th century England. A study of the university town of Oxford in the 1340's showed an extraordinarily high annual rate of about 110 per 100,000 people. Studies of London in the first half of the 14th century determined a homicide rate of 36 to 52 per 100,000 people per year.

Hi,

Thanks for your report. It looks like you share the same name as the person you reported and it does not appear that they are otherwise impersonating you.

Thanks,

Dillon

Which of the following best describes your situation?: person_impersonation

Do you have an Instagram account?: no

Is this account impersonating you?: user_impersonation

Your full name:: Bergur Ebbi Benediktsson

Your email address:: bergur.ebbi.benediktsson@gmail.com

Your Instagram username (if applicable):: markberg

Instagram username(s) of reported account(s):: bergurebbi

Description:: My name is Bergur Ebbi and I am the only one with that name. I am a public person and my name is registered not only by authorities but it is also my brand - I am a writer and comedian and I use my name widely to promote myself.

Whoever is using that Instagram account is only getting followers because people believe that I am behind it. This is identity theft and if it will not be shut down by Instagram I will contact local police.

Please let me know when this account has been taken down. I wish to get that username under my control and start using it - to avoid this happening again.

Let me know if any further clarification is needed.

Attached is a copy of my passport.

Respectfully, Bergur Ebbi
